Comments from the Chief Executive Officer

Jaime Rivera, Bladex's Chief Executive Officer, stated the following regarding the quarter's results:

"Bladex is benefiting from underlying fundamentals in our markets that remain strong. Trade in Latin America continues growing at a healthy pace, with industry and financial trends in the Region reflecting generally improving macroeconomic conditions.

Bladex's financial performance during the third quarter represents, in my opinion, the strength of the Bank's business model and franchise. Despite, working in the midst of significant volatility in many sectors of the financial markets, Bladex was able to achieve solid results across most of our businesses.

The Commercial Division capitalized on increasing lending spreads, rising credit demand, an expanded client base, and solid portfolio quality, to post a 7% quarterly improvement in operating income, placing it 23% ahead of 2006 year-to-date results. While it is too early to discern a trend, competitive pressures in the Region's offshore credit business have generally eased, while pricing levels have improved.

The Treasury Division, coming off a record second quarter, returned to a more normalized performance level, contributing 29% of the quarter's operating income. Significantly, in spite of market dislocations, the trading results from Bladex's proprietary asset management activities were satisfactory. With four consecutive quarters of positive trading results, we believe the medium-term economics of the business have been established.

Significantly as well, in light of both market conditions and strong loan growth, the Bank further strengthened its ample liquidity position while maintaining stability in the cost of its funding. We intend to carry an especially strong liquidity position as long as volatile conditions in the market warrant it.

While we are satisfied with the success of the expansion and diversification of the Bank's client base, as well as with the results of transforming the Treasury Division into a revenue center, we remain dissatisfied with both the trend and absolute level of fee income. While Bladex has plans to offset the decline in the letter of credit and guarantee business, we foresee the fees charged on third party asset management, a business line we intend to deploy in the coming months, as providing the most significant short-term source of incremental fees.

In summary terms, with net income through the end of the third quarter running 54% ahead of 2006, Bladex believes that it possesses the market and management momentum needed to continue executing on all aspects of its strategy." Mr. Rivera, concluded.
