Corning Chairman to Shareholders: "We're Moving from `Survive' to `Thrive'"

Multiple growth opportunities play to company's strengths, Houghton says

CORNING, N.Y. -- Corning Incorporated's (NYSE:GLW) Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, James R. Houghton, today told shareholders that the company is continuing to make significant progress in meeting its financial goals, and is poised for growth in a number of strong high-tech markets.

"Last year, we had begun our road to recovery," Houghton said. "We had already taken dramatic actions to stop the bleeding of cash and to ensure that our balance sheet remained healthy. And we were surviving.

"But I also told you one year ago that just surviving the downturn would not be enough. We had to move from `survive' to `thrive' once again. And I told you that one day soon, we would be talking about growth - significant growth - once again. Today, thanks to our businesses successes in 2003, we're here to do exactly that," Houghton said.

Houghton's remarks were part of his annual address to more than 500 shareholders assembled for the company's annual meeting in Corning, N.Y. He reiterated the company's frequent message that it is concentrating its' efforts on protecting its financial health; improving profitability; investing in its future; and to live its values. "I'm very happy to tell you that we're doing very well in all these areas," he said.

Financial health

Houghton pointed out that the company's balance sheet remains strong, and that it continues to reduce its debt burden each quarter while maintaining adequate cash balances. "The major credit rating agencies have all moved us to a `stable' outlook, so we are regaining their confidence," he said.

Regarding profitability, Houghton pointed to the fact that the company improved net profit before special charges by $500 million last year, the most significant year-to-year improvement in the company's history. "And, again excluding special charges, we were profitable last year by a few cents per share."

"Now, is it enough to be profitable by just a few cents? Of course not. So we are continuing with our plans to improve our financial performance," Houghton said. He referred to the company's strong first-quarter results, with sales exceeding expectations and earnings of eight cents per share, excluding special items. "If positive economic and market trends continue, we expect a good increase in sales and earnings this year," he said.

Investing in the future

Houghton reminded shareholders of the company's continued commitment to innovation. In reference to Corning's broad range of technological opportunities, Houghton said, "We have taken to saying that `our glass is full.'" He pointed to what he called "the depth and breadth of our innovation pipeline," with special emphasis on those with the most significant near-term potential: liquid-crystal display glass; diesel filters and substrates; and fiber in the access network. He outlined how high-technology opportunities fit well with Corning's strengths in innovation and knowledge of advance materials, and in solving complex problems for customers. He told shareholders, "with all that in mind, I think you'll have no trouble understanding why we feel so good about Corning's current situation, and about the future that is shaping up for us, both in the near-term and over the years to come."

Houghton closed by thanking Corning employees and the members of the Corning community for their ongoing support of the company. "This is a wonderful community - one which we are proud to call home," he said. "Your belief in this company and in this management has given all of us the energy and the will we needed to pull through this most difficult time. We will continue to draw on your support as we move toward our bright future."

In other business, shareholders elected the following directors to three-year terms: Dr. Jeremy R. Knowles, professor and former dean, faculty of arts and sciences, Harvard University; Eugene C. Sit, chairman, chief executive officer and chief investment officer of Sit Investment Associates, Inc.; William D. Smithburg, retired chief executive officer and chairman, Quaker Oats Company; Hansel E. Tookes II, retired chief executive officer and chairman, Raytheon Aircraft Company; and Wendell P. Weeks, president and chief operating officer, Corning Incorporated.

Shareholders also ratified the Corning Board audit committee's appointment of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP as independent auditors for 2004.

A shareholder proposal regarding certain future severance agreements with senior executives passed. The non-binding proposal urges the Board of Directors to seek shareholder approval for future senior executive severance agreements that exceed certain financial maximums. The Board and its compensation committee have agreed to review the matter carefully.

Presentation of Information in This News Release

The comment about "improved net profit before special charges by $500 million last year" is a non-GAAP measure as it excludes special items in periods compared -- gains or losses arising from previously announced restructuring actions, asset impairments and other charges, gains or charges related to ongoing debt reduction program, adjustments to the company's asbestos settlement reserve and income from discontinued operations. The company believes presenting net profit before special charges is helpful to understanding improvements in Corning's operating results including equity earnings. Corning provides a reconciliation of profitability on its investor relations website (www.corning.com/investor_relations).
