June 4, 2007

Dear Valued Customer,

We are incredibly excited to inform you that Flextronics and Solectron have agreed to join forces to create the most diversified global EMS company in the industry. The combined company, which will operate under the name of Flextronics, will have operations to serve you in 35 countries, with approximately 200,000 employees worldwide. Mike McNamara will continue to lead Flextronics as CEO.

For our valued customers, the combined global operations of Flextronics and Solectron offer many key benefits including increased capabilities in design (5,000 engineers) and vertically integrated end-to-end supply chain services across multiple industry segments. Our combined resources and skill sets allow us to leverage greater global economies-of-scale in design, engineering, ODM, procurement, manufacturing, logistics and repair services. The enhanced capabilities of the combined company will provide meaningful improvements for our customers in time-to-market, time-to-cost and time-to- volume, while simultaneously creating additional growth opportunities in new emerging market segments.

Between now and closing, which is expected to occur toward the end of calendar 2007, we will be working diligently to answer any questions you may have and provide you with a detailed plan on the strategy of the combined organization. We believe this consolidation will prove to be an incredibly positive event for our customers.

We are extremely excited about the opportunity that is ahead for our customers, the combined company and our shareholders. As a valued customer, please be assured that this change will not disrupt our current business relationship.

A member of our business development team will be contacting you directly to provide additional information and answer any questions you may have. We are extremely excited about today's announcement and look forward to providing you with the many significant benefits afforded by the combination of Flextronics and Solectron.

Best regards,

Paul Tufano
