Before I go to that, I know, I know a lot of you, when I met you in the corridors, or in the office, or by phone, said yes, what's going to happen at CVS, and International, yeah? 00:00:46 So, let me recap. End of last year, now the two board of CVS and Aetna agreed for the acquisition of Aetna by CVS. But this deal is signed, but not closed. Because this deal will need several of the step of approval, with the IT's all shareholder's approval, and IT's regulatory approval in different market in the US. Also, IT's Department of Justice approval also in the US, and some other regulatory approval around the world. 00:01:22 So, it is not forecast to close before second half of 2018. Number one. Number two, until that transaction close, we operate as two separate companies. Absolutely two separate companies. It is business as usual, if I may summarize it. What we can do, in the meantime, is to do some, what we call, transition planning. Planning, I use the word of planning. 00:01:58 And that's why, maybe you have noticed, that for Aetna, Rick Jelinek is going to lead the, the transition team. Rick is part of Mark's staff. He's head of strategy, and he leads the transition. And there's a team that is mainly composed of domestic Aetna people, that are going to be part of this transition. And from the CVS side, it is the same. And the transition team is going to look at the operating model, you know, how can we deliver more value for our customers. 00:02:29 Because this integration is a vertical integration, that fits perfectly well to what Mark has described in terms of his strategy for years, and years, and years. How to provide directly to consumer a better health experience, more personalized, more convenient, at better affordable cost, yeah. And that is why we are all excited about that.

[00:02:56] RICHARD DI BENEDETTO

So, what does it mean for our International? We will see, okay. But I am here. I'm not going anywhere. Okay, don't cry. But, but I had part of this transition discussion. I had, was privileged to meet, last month or two weeks ago, to meet Larry Merlo. Larry Merlo is president and CEO of CVS, and he should be the – also and he would be, I guess, the president and CEO of the combined entities, yeah. 00:03:30 And I spent an hour and a half, which is pretty long time when you're on one to one with a big CEO, okay, talking about you. Because International is you. It's nobody else, yeah. Talking about you, what you do, what you deliver, and what's, what's, what's our strategy. So, I talked about, you know, how we started from the traditional ex-pat market. How we have expand, looking towards more global mobile. 00:04:02 How we have been adding more healthcare capabilities, how we want to drive more virtual health to guide the membership, the member journey to any healthcare journey. And how we want to enter also local market, like we do in Canada or like we do in Thailand now. Because by being in local market also, you know, you can serve border populations, but also in some geographies, you can meet some un, unrealized need for, for our customers. 00:04:34 And I said, you know, ultimately, maybe we will have also some primary care centers, like your Minute Clinic. You know, because, you know, sometimes a member needs to be seen by a physician, whether it is a nurse physically, or whether it is a doctor, and, and you have like 1,100 Minute Clinics. So, I think this is a great model. And he told me, yeah, it's fantastic, because I want to do the reverse. I have my 1,100 Minute Clinic that I want to expand. But I want also to move upstream on the care journey, so more health management, so virtual health. 00:05:06 And through insurance offering. It was an extremely positive discussion, extremely positive. I left, and I said, it could not have gone better. It was very positive about the quality of the dialogue, about the passion he has. It's a genuine interest about International. CVS has a very small international footprint. They have been, they bought around 40 pharmacy clinic centers, in Brazil about 3 or 4 years ago. 00:05:37 And then they have been very focused on the, on doing some Minute Clinic expansion in the US. But he told me, for me, International is not an if, yeah. It's when. And you say, now if and when, we join with Aetna together, I have a platform. I have a platform for where I can build of, yeah. So, I'm really, I'm really excited about the dialogue that we have. We're going to learn more from the transition team in the coming months or weeks. 00:06:10 So, watch, watch – keep, keep, keep watching on the news, how the operating model is going, is going to, to be setup. And what does it mean for International? But I am very, I am really positive about how CVS is looking at this vertical integration, about the capabilities. As I said, you know, what type of capabilities we have we could bring to International. And we're going towards that, that transition phase. 00:06:38 So, in between, until the deal is closed, business as usual. If, for any reason, it should not happen, someone from CVS reach out to you, should not happen because again, they don't have an international presence, but it can happen in the US, know you have to escalate to me or to the integration team, and they will handle any specific request that the CVS team may, may have. So, very positive. I'm really excited, and I think this is going to be, even a journey for us to accelerate growth. 00:07:08 And even more important, to add more capabilities in the market we serve, yeah. Clear? Good.
