*2018 Customer Forum
CVS and Aetna Shared Vision
A conversation between Karen Lynch and Larry Merlo*

KAREN LYNCH

I can't tell you how excited we are as a company about the future of bringing these two companies together. And I know that you know this. This is not a new strategy for us. This merger is truly an acceleration of the strategy that we've been talking about for a number of years.

An industry ripe for disruption

LARRY MERLO

Today, you see that healthcare represents 18 cents for every dollar that's spent in this country and there are studies out there that say, you know, it's headed to 20 percent, you know, within the not too distant future. And, everyone across, you know, the healthcare delivery spectrum has worked very hard, you know, to bring innovation that, you know, is helping to reduce cost without compromising access or quality to care. And while there have been, you know, some improvements across that spectrum, you know, it really hasn't been enough, you know, to bend the cost curve.

Helping people achieve their best health

LARRY MERLO

The combination of, you know, the customer facing assets, and what Aetna provides in the marketplace, we think that, that becomes the nucleus for creating, you know, a new healthcare platform that can help people achieve their best health at a lower cost than, you know, what we experience today.

Bringing a local presence into the community and home

LARRY MERLO

The ability to have a local presence, the ability to have face-to-face engagement, now you combine that with CVS and the fact that we have 10,000 points of access all across the country and about 80 percent of the US population lives within 3 or 4 miles of a CVS. You know, the two companies combined will have about 40,000 healthcare professionals, between pharmacists, nurse practitioners, nurses. You know, and they're local. So, it's not just about going into a CVS Pharmacy, we can go into the home.

An opportunity to bring a meaningful solution

LARRY MERLO

We see some of the disconnects that exist in the system today that quite frankly as CVS Health, we can't do. You know, as Aetna, as a standalone business can't do. Okay, but you bring the capabilities of the two organizations together and now you start saying, wow, okay. We really have an opportunity to, you know, take some of these things that we know are broken and bring a meaningful solution. And I think that, you know, we're just scratching the surface with, you know, some of the, I'll say use cases that we know, you know, become, you know, real opportunities, you know, to do something different and to create a new care, a new care delivery model.

Transforming the marketplace

KAREN LYNCH

If you think about one of the areas that we've been really focusing on is what can we do that's transformative in the marketplace, and we bring these two companies together, we've got work underway to say what, what can we bring to market that, that wow factor. And this combination will allow us to do that. Will allow us to think about benefit designs in a very different way. It allows us to think about how we interact with the communities and with physician practices and provider systems in a very different way.
