Lake Forest, Illinois (February 1, 2005) CNH Global N.V. (NYSE:CNH) announced today that it is reorganizing its Agricultural Equipment Business to drive additional focus on achieving best-in-class business results. The new organization will place greater emphasis on strategic marketing and brand management, brand identity and communication, and supply chain activities.

The company is also creating an International Region to be responsible for industrial and commercial activities in Australia and New Zealand, eastern Europe, Africa, Asia, and the Middle East, as well as its joint ventures. This action recognizes the significance of a number of rapidly growing markets for agricultural equipment, while allowing the other three regions to devote their full resources to the core markets of western and central Europe, Latin America, and North America.

Two years ago, we created geographic regions to improve our speed of decision-making and to better meet regional and customer requirements, said Roland Sunden, President, Agricultural Equipment Business. We also set up global functions to improve the management of our strategic assets, such as brands, capital investments and product development resources. The organizational changes we are announcing today are refinements to this structure, and mark a strengthening of our global functions by assigning senior operational and business leaders to drive them.

Rich Christman, previously responsible for the Agricultural North America and Australia-New Zealand Region, has been named Chief of Commercial Governance and Supply Chain, Agricultural Equipment Business. He will be based in Lake Forest, Illinois, and have responsibility for agricultural business development, brand management and strategy, distribution structure and policies, supply chain, and aftermarket sales process improvement.

Franco Fusignani, formerly head of the Agricultural Europe, Africa and Asia Region, is Chief of Product Development and Industrial Governance, Agricultural Equipment Business. Responsible for the planning, design and launch of new products; industrial investment; technology strategy; and industrial policies, Fusignani will be based in Lake Forest, Illinois.
