Payer Reactions to New Drug Pricing

You know, as we look out over the next several years at Express Scripts, there are a number of things that we are focused on working with our payers to deal with. Primarily, when they look at the pipeline of specialty drugs, which has over 5,000 potential products in it, the payers are of two minds. They are excited about the innovation. They've seen that that innovation can often provide value to their patients and even at times, lower cost for their plans on an overall basis. But all too often, represents simply increased costs for patients that today may have been cared for by lower cost therapies. And so we are spending a lot of time these days at Express Scripts, talking with heads of pharma companies and their managed care teams to help get pricing conversations to a place where the payers can actually tolerate when the drug comes out creating access for the patients. Because in the end, that's what it's all about at Express Scripts, is getting those patients access to those products and then helping the patient take it safely and cost effectively. So, a lot of work there.

Accredo Helps One Dad Fulfill His Promise

When I was first diagnosed with cancer, it was a real shock. I didn't want to think about, the potential impact of what cancer could do to my family. I've been writing notes to my daughter Emma, ever since she was in kindergarten. I wanted to make her lunch a little special. In the beginning, the notes were simple and it wasn't a thing. There was one morning when I had finished making her lunch and I hadn't yet written a note. She scooped up her lunch bag in the kitchen and kind of walked over to me and looked up. All she said was, "Napkin note?" I mean, how do you not write notes at that point? So I made it a daily practice. After my third cancer diagnosis, I really freaked out. We're grasping at straws trying to figure out, how to keep me alive. The things that kept sticking in my head were median lifespan, which was one year. And, five year survival rate which was 8 percent. And Emma was graduating high school in about five years. I got to the point where I thought I wasn't going to make it. So I did what any normal guy would do... freak out and grab a bunch of napkins. 826. In the dark of night, I'm writing 10, 20, 30 notes at a time. Trying to get these notes taken care of and get them ready for safekeeping. I have metastatic kidney cancer. I'm not getting out of this alive. I don't know when things might go wrong, but guess what, nobody does. If you can make the life of a patient easier, they can spend more time with their family. That's all that matters. Because of the assistance, because of the help, because of the care that I received from Accredo. Because of the fact that you treat me like a real patient a real person, I don't have to worry about running out of these medicines. And it is easier than ordering anything. Some of the side effects I have are pretty severe. So I can talk to a nurse, I can talk to the pharmacist, we can try to figure out and troubleshoot what's going on. I talk to the folks at Accredo more than I talk to my oncologist. I'm still just this dad writing notes to his daughter. Today the notes still are sitting in the box where they were when I started. My hope is I can give them to her for high school graduation. I'm going to get up and I'm going to fight another day. I just have to make it to that next day.

How Express Scripts Practices Pharmacy

If you've been to a pharmacy lately, you've probably noticed that as more and more people need medicines, pharmacists have less and less time to help them. Personalized care is practically impossible when a typical pharmacist is filling 30 prescriptions an hour. But Express Scripts practices pharmacy smarter. Giving patients care no matter where they get their medicine. And elevating that care even more. When it's through home delivery, or from Accredo, our specialty pharmacy. In our pharmacies, care is more personalized for patients with chronic and complex diseases. Here's why this approach is so important. Daily medications for chronic conditions, like diabetes, are taken by 1 in 2 Americans. And that 50% is driving 95% of U.S. drug spend. For specialty medicines, the numbers are more ominous. With just 1% of patients accounting for 31% of the spend, which continues to rise, in part, because not enough time is spent to help patients understand and stay on their medications. But because our approach is specialized, we do have the time to deliver care that is personal, focused, and unmatched. In our therapeutic resource centers, pharmacists, nurses and clinicians collaborate in teams like small physician practices to focus their care on key conditions. Every Express Scripts patient has access to this unparalleled expertise. We offer private, one-to-one counseling for all patients. Those with common chronic conditions, like diabetes or high cholesterol. When the conditions are more complex, our teams work with Accredo, our specialty pharmacy to deliver the most advanced medicines with the highest level of care and compassion. Our philosophy is simple: if you had cancer, you'd want an oncologist. Pharmacies don't differ: why shouldn't your pharmacist also be a specialist? Specialization delivers better outcomes for our patients and helps our clients control costs. Specialization isn't just how we practice pharmacy. It's about practicing pharmacy smarter.
